Both English and Chinese use the “Subject-Verb-Object” system.

However, in Chinese we usually put the place in the middle of the sentence while English puts it towards the end.

Also, in English, using a pronoun as a subject or object can change the spelling. For example, “I” and “me”,

Chinglish - Wikipedia

A simple Google search for 'English in China' yields more than 36,000,000 results! It cannot be argued that English is unpopular in the Middle Kingdom. With so many learners there, it stands to reason that a variety of English peculiar to China would eventually develop, and there is much evidence to suggest that it has already begun.

Probably the most obvious difference between English and Chinese is that they use different alphabets. English uses the Latin or Roman alphabet, consisting of 26 letters. Chinese uses a non-alphabetic script of logograms. In other words, characters represent words or phrases (so it's not strictly speaking an alphabet).
